"PAGING MONEY"
2-Reel Century Comedy
With an All Star Cast

Two book agents, thrown out of a window into their patented life net, waste their sales talk on a couple of deaf mutes, and later, demonstrate how to build a house by correspondence school methods, to the contractor's dismay, who has to rebuild the house properly. Dizzy from the oniony breath of a workman, one of the boys comes to and finds a kind-hearted passerby has dropped a half-dollar in his hat. The coin falls through his pocket several times; each time he thinks he has discovered further capital. With his supposed two dollars, he takes his partner to eat, both are thrown out by the irate owner for not paying their check.

Harry, chucked out of an office, disguises himself as a girl, makes--a sale, but is detected, chased and thrown out of a window. Trying to "fix" his girl's father's auto, he wrecks everything, and blows the tires up so much the car floats up in mid-air. The car explodes, but the passengers are saved by floating down to earth on the expanded tires.
